Not illustrated. 1813 Excerpt: . has so repeatedly declared, that he will not save us without first renovating us. (page 155.) From page 170 to 172, we select the following observations, which we consider worthy of the most serious attention. If an intelligent Chinese had been made acquainted with the high privileges and sublime hopes of a Christian--what advantages he possesses here, and what projects he has in reversion, not contingent, but certain, provided he turned his advantages to the securing of his prospects; what promises had been made Him from an authority he allowed, and a veracity he trusted;--what a glorious people would he expect to find in a society of such highly privileged beings! Would he not look for cordial obedience to his laws in whose will they daily express a complete acquiescence?--for unbounded love and charity among creatures who periodically confessed that their own sins could not be...
